DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-5, 8 and 9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Jarrett (US 5,735,701) in view of Pham (US 6,081,419).

Jarrett discloses a power supply (5) for an electrical appliance (40), comprising: a connector/interface (12, as shown in Fig.1) for receiving an electrical member (20), and the power supply can be removed from the electrical appliance for installation or servicing purposes; and an insertion protection device (14) for preventing insertion of the electrical plug into the female connector when the power supply is not installed in a correct location (e.g. when 18 is aligned with 32) of the electrical appliance.

However, Jarrett does not disclose specifies whether the connector (12) and the electrical member (20) are female or male, respectively. Pham teaches a power supply (18) for an electrical appliance (10) comprising a female connector (36) on the power supply for receiving an electrical plug (48). This interface structure reduces the risk of tampering during storage or transportation of the power supply. Therefore, it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art at the time the invention was made to form the power supply of Jarrett with a female connector for receiving an electrical plug, as taught by Pham, to reduce the risk of tampering during storage or transportation of the power supply.

Regarding claim 2, Jarrett discloses the power supply further comprising a mounting rack (see following figure), and the insertion protection device is a slide (please note that element 14 slides between the positions shown in Fig.2 and 4) disposed in the mounting rack.

Regarding claim 3, Jarrett discloses the slide at least partially covering the connector (12) when the slide is in a locked state (as shown in Fig.2).

Regarding claim 4, Jarrett discloses a spring (22) acting on the slide for pushing the slide into a locking position (as shown in Fig.2), in which the connector (12) is at least partially covered by the slide.

Regarding claim 5, Jarrett discloses that the slide can be moved from the locking position only by applying force to the spring at two different positions (i.e. the two ends of the spring). Please note that in order for the slide to be moved a tension force must be applied to the spring by the slide and a counteracting tension force is applied at the end in which the spring is attached to the housing.

Regarding claim 8, Jarrett discloses the insertion protection device preventing removal of the power supply from the electrical appliance when the electrical plug is inserted in the connector (col.3 lines 46-50).

Regarding claim 9, Jarrett discloses the power supply being use in a computer system (col.3 lines 13-14).

Allowable Subject Matter

Claims 6 and 7 are allowed.

The following is a statement of reasons for the indication of allowable subject matter: the prior art fails to teach or suggest the slide being automatically release from the locking position by an insertion process, in combination with the remaining limitations of the claims. Jarrett discloses that the slide is manually moved and there is no teaching or motivation to release the slide automatically by the insertion process.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Tonozyuka (US 6,439,917) discloses a power supply with a protection device.
